Could we, without making too much trouble, get the answers to these questions:

1. From January to September 1946, CIG had no independent means of acquiring need employees and therefore had no means of a personnel office other than some sort of liaison with the State War and Navy departments which were to furnish personnel by allotment. What was the actual CIG personnel organization (if any) during this time, and what did it do?

2. After the hiring and firing power had been conceded by the NIA to the Director (generally speaking after September 5) whatxstepsxwereztaken a more or less full-scale personnel operation seems to have been attempted. How was it organized and what did it principally attempt to do during the next year (i.e. up to about the time when the Group became the A ency)?
